ABOUT THE NATIONAL UNIVERSITY OF SINGAPORE:
The teaching of business administration at the then University of Singapore began in 1961 when Business Administration was introduced as a course of study in the Department of Economics. In 1965, the Department of Business Administration was set up with only four full-time staff. The Department of Business Administration and the Department of Accountancy were combined to form the School of Accountancy and Business Administration in 1969. With the merger of the University of Singapore and Nanyang University in 1980, the Faculty of Accountancy and Business Administration was established. The new Faculty comprised the Department of Accountancy and the Department of Business Administration. In 1983, the Faculty was restructured, resulting in the formation of the School of Accountancy and the School of Management. In 1987, the School of Accountancy was moved to Nanyang Technological Institute. With that, the Faculty’s name was shortened to the Faculty of Business Administration. In 2002, the Faculty of Business Administration was renamed as the School of Business (commonly known as the NUS Business School). Today, the school has about 160 faculty members. The University’s Mission is to educate business leaders and advance knowledge to promote the progress of global business and society. We seek to be a leading global business school recognized for excellence in education and research. Additionally, we will become the most highly recognized business school throughout Asia within the decade. The University has 1,632 students with 19.25% international students and 105 full-time Faculty.
