

Tommaso Albanese is an Adjunct Professor in Finance at Stern. He graduated in Economics at Bocconi, got an MBA at NYU Stern and was Visiting Scholar at MIT Sloan. He worked for 18 years in investment banking, first at Credit Suisse First Boston and then for the last 16 years at Morgan Stanley & Co mostly as a Managing Director. Among his responsibilities, Tommaso was Co-Head of Global Capital Markets in Europe and Global Head of Corporate Derivatives. Since leaving Morgan Stanley in 2006, Tommaso has been running his own investment firm. He is also a Lecturer at the Cass Business School of the City University of London, England.